Dear FCC:

I am submitting my public comments for the review of the use of cellular telephones on airborne aircraft. Docket No. WT 04-435.

I am against the use of cell phones when airborne. I do not wish to be on an airplane and be subjected to people talking out loud on their phones. People have already made it a habit to talking in all manner of public places and often loudly. Although that isn't prohibitive, it in my opinion is rude.

To think people will be permitted to talk in the confined space of an airplane would make me want to end ever flying again. I already can imagine how awful it would be to have people talking in the rows all around me and of course even next to me, especially on long flights. If these same people who talk in public buildings are allowed to talk on an airplane in flight they wouldn't care who they may disturb sitting next to them. They would probably even talk if I were trying to sleep. It irritates me just thinking about it.

I urge the FCC not to permit the usage of cell phones on an aircraft in flight.

Sincerely,
